Here at duck2water our favourite model from this French range is the Renault Mégane Coupé Cabriolet.

No, we're not mad, and yes, we do live in Great Britain, but when that sun shines we just love to put the top down and have the wind in our hair.

The Renault Mégane Coupé Cabriolet

Protection from the elements

Driving should be a pleasure no matter what weather conditions are outside and this is where the Megane CC excels. If it is lashing down (as it occasionally does in the UK) you are cosseted inside a hard top giving the illusion of any other family coupé.

Even when sheltered from the elements the expansive glass roof lends a refreshingly airy feel to the interior. And whilst you bask in the light you are protected from harmful UV rays by the special glass.

With the roof up, it looks like a lot of topline coupés, only it has a rather pronounced rear view as a result of the fold away hard top. Personally, I like the generous rear end – it lends an air of solidness to the car. Yes, I know it's no sports model; we're talking about a rigid fold away roof here – it's never going to match the Mazda MX-5 Roadster Coupe for perkiness. After all the Renault boasts 4 seats and that's a lot of roof to fit in a small space if you still want some boot to speak of, so, it's bound to have a decent midriff.

Then the magic happens

It's when you put the top down that you know you've got something special on your hands. Firstly, it takes a mere touch of a button for the roof to fold neatly away, completely inconspicuously, in about 22 seconds (oh, if only we could have that happen with the kids and their toys and clothes).

Hey presto, you're in a totally different space; a new world of motor engineering and environment coming seamlessly together to blow away the cares of the world. Yes, it really is like that!

From the outside it possesses an elegant character, with its high windscreen and sleek uncluttered lines; courtesy of the fold away roof of-course. Jealous looks from passers-by are guaranteed, we're afraid.

What's under the bonnet (and in other places)

The Mégane CC range starts with the Extreme VVT 1.6 petrol model; boasting a four cylinder engine with 109 bhp, and an extra urban fuel consumption of 49.5 mpg. Top of the range is the Privilège 2.0 Turbo 165 petrol engine or the Privilège dCi 150 6 speed version; where you not only get engine refinements, but climate control, cruise control and ESP (electronic stability programme) with ASR (anti-slip regulation) traction control and CSV understeer control as standard.

In fact there are no fewer than five engines and three different transmission choices, so everyone, even those of you with a heavy right foot, will find something that you are looking for.

2 seats or 4?

If you're opting for a coupe cabriolet it's probably because you do need those extra seats in the back. Let's be honest here. If you've got two six foot teenagers to take on a driving holiday to the continent you're probably in for a bundle of whinging from the back. The headroom is a little compromised when compared with a standard coupé and legroom behind the front seats of even medium height adults is not great.

But if you're likely to need to ferry extra passengers about on short trips, it can be done, and in some style.

Safe Renault driving

The CC scores highly in Euro NCAP safety ratings with a maximum five out of five stars. It has front and side airbags to the front seats and airbags to stop occupants from sliding under the seatbelts in the event of an accident. The windscreen is of-course reinforced and there are rear roll over hoops. For extra peace of mind you can get pop-up roll-over protection as an add-on.

The duck2water car insurance Renault Mégane CC fan club

The overall concept of the Mégane CC is a wonderful thing. It is two cars in one; a solid driving coupe one moment and a super stylish, top-down, wind-in-your-hair cabriolet the next. The high end diesel option makes for great choice in the range and some of the trim options can turn an all round good interior into a trendy riot of colour or a pool of sumptuous leather.
