

duck2water car insurance – a quacking good deal

Forget the jokes; check out our cheap car insurance

Do you need car insurance for a learner driver? Perhaps it's woman's car insurance you need or maybe you've been driving for years and never had an accident. Whatever type of motor insurance you need, if you've just been sent your renewal notice and you are shocked at how much the cost of the policy has gone up, you have now come to the right place.

The basics of car insurance

Ok, nuts and bolts time. You need to decide which level of cover you will require.

Third party ~ the most basic cover duck2water supplies. If you are involved in an accident that you have caused, a third party policy will pay for the damage done to the other vehicle. It will also protect you if the other driver wishes to make a personal injury claim. However, any damage to your own car or loss of earnings you face, will not be covered. You will have to foot the bill for your repairs and a hire car if necessary.

Third party, fire and theft ~ this level has an addition to third party only car insurance cover. If your car is stolen or set on fire, then you are protected and you could receive a payout to the value of the lost car.

Comprehensive ~ the top level of cover not only covers damages to the other person in the accident, but also yourself and your vehicle. You will also be covered for a certain amount of medical expenses and damage to personal effects.

Legal expenses after a road traffic accident

Whichever level of car insurance cover you choose, you will automatically receive free legal expenses insurance with duck2water. This means that after an accident that was not your fault, if you need to make a personal injury claim, we will provide you with a personal injury solicitor who can sort out the compensation claim on your behalf. You will be covered for up to £50,000 of legal expenses.

We give you this bonus, whereas other insurance companies may charge as much as £50.
